Consumption

There is no specific for consumption. Fresh air, exercise, nourishing food and Scott's Emulsion will come pretty near curing it, if there is anything to build on. Millions of people throughout the world are living and in good health on one lung.

From time immemorial the doctors prescribed cod liver oil for consumption. Of course the patient could not take it in its old form, hence it did very little good. They can take and tolerate it for a long time. There is no oil, not excepting butter, so easily digested and absorbed by the system as cod liver oil in the form of Scott's Emulsion, and that is the reason it is so helpful in consumption where its use must be continuous.

We will send you a sample free.

Be sure that this picture in the form of a label is on the wrapper of every bottle of Emulsion you buy.

BELIEVES HIS PROPERTY WILL AMOUNT TO SOMETHING

Fred Sattce came in Monday evening from the Mirably mine, on Groom Creek, in which he is a part owner, more than enthused over the good showing being made in the upper tunnel being run on the mine, and firmly convinced that the property will turn out to be among the best in the district with further development.

"In the upper tunnel," he said, "which is now in a distance of 75 feet, there is a ten inch paystreak of high grade gold ore, a portion of which samples $160 to the ton. Ore milled from this tunnel when it was first started gave average returns of over $150 to the ton.

"The vein is opened by another tunnel farther down the mountain, which follows it a distance of 400 feet, and there is also a good showing in this tunnel.

"Among a number of other miners who are developing promising claims in this district may be mentioned T. J. Laird, who is sinking a shaft on a group of mines owned by him and Robert Brow, and taking out good ore. Pat Fitzgerald's property, on lower Groom Creek, is also developing well, and William Gamill has a small force of men sinking a shaft on his mine and taking out excellent ore."

The Groom Creek district is located about six miles south of this city, in a spur of the Sierra Prieta Mountains.

COMEDY AT THE ELKS.

Thursday evening, at the Elks' Theater, there will be presented for the delectation of local theater goers the rural comedy drama, "Uncle Josh Perkins," which has been on tour for a number of seasons past.

The management claims for the piece this year that it is "bigger and better than ever," which, if true, assures a good attraction for those loving clean, refined humor of the rural type.

The story depicted in the play is the doings of a bold, bad villain and a pure, sweet girl, but the humor of the play hinges on the doings of "Uncle Josh," a type of the big-hearted farmer, who, in his strenuous endeavor to assist all those he finds in distress, is, as a result, always in trouble himself, but in a manner so humorous as to keep the audience laughing.

The sale of seats is now on at Briley's, and the play will be presented Thursday evening, one night only.

BELIEVES ARIZONA WILL LEAD IN COPPER

(From Tuesday's Daily.)

"From what I have seen of western and southwestern Yavapai, Mohave and that part of Yuma county, tributary to the Arizona & California railroad, I make the statement without hesitation, that with reasonable development in these sections, Arizona will be far in the lead as a copper producer five years hence." Such was the statement made yesterday to a Journal Miner man by J. P. Bedling, a mining engineer of over thirty years' experience in the mining states of the west, who returned here lately from an extended tour through these parts.

"The great surface indications of copper and gold mines in the Harqua Hala, Hareuver and Bill Williams Fork Mountains is only equalled," he said, "by the showings found in that part of Yavapai county extending from the Hillside mine to the Mohave county boundary and west to the line of Yuma county."

"Surpassing anything that I ever witnessed, either in the Black Hills of Dakota, or the great Montana mines, is a ledge on Burro Creek, near its mouth, over 200 feet in width and which is cut by a canyon to a depth of 300 feet, the entire body of quartz sampling $4 to the ton in gold."

"In the Black Rock district I saw some very promising copper ledges, in addition to the O'Brien gold mines, from which there will be an immense output when the reduction plant is installed and in operation."

"The King Solomon shaft is now down past the 400 foot level, from which some very high grade gold ore is being mined. There is a great copper mine in the Uncle Sam group which is now idle, from some unknown cause, although it is a well known fact that there is shipping ore in it from the grassroots down."

"Experience has proven here, as in other mining countries that deep mining pays. It is a recognized fact that wherever good ore has been found near the surface that it also exists at depth although the vein may be broken by many faults. As a general rule, the ledges in all the great mines have been more continuous and the ore bodies richer and more permanent below the 500 foot levels, for the reason that in the majority of cases the surface crust of the earth has rarely been disturbed below the 300 foot level by earthquake disturbances. Old miners all remember that when the Nevada mines were visited by an earthquake, the greatest shocks were felt underground in and near the 300 foot level, while below the 500 foot level, where the ledge was better defined than nearer the surface, no shock was experienced by any of the underground workmen."

"I have not seen the eastern part of the county yet, but from what I have heard, I believe that it is equally as rich as the other is promising."

"On account of its central location and climatic conditions, Prescott is the natural supply point of the districts visited, which I believe are equal to any in the west in the way of mineral resources. In my opinion, the merchants and business men here should do more to advertise the resources of the country than appears to have been done in the past. They do not appear to realize the immense resources of the country bordering all around them or the advantages to be gained from liberal and legitimate advertising."

"I have decided to cast my lot here," he concluded, "and I am anxious to see this country come to the front."

PAINTED THE ELK.

(From Friday's Daily.)

Wednesday night, because it was Halloween, and because his natural desire to commit malicious mischief led him on, some unknown miscreant, with infinite labor, made his way to the top of the Elks' Theater building, and then, with a brush and buckets of red and white paint, proceeded to decorate the bronze elk that adorns the top of the building at the front end, in a manner entirely in accord, no doubt, with his esthetic tastes and love of color.

The police are making an effort to ascertain the miscreant's identity, and if discovered, it is safe to predict that he will be taught a lesson in the police court.

HOW THE LADIES VIEWED THE POLITICAL MEETING

What with New York politicians calling each other cockroaches, and croton bugs; with a certain candidate being so disgusted with himself that he contemplates entering suit for libel against anyone calling him by his right name, and the affairs in a certain town being in such condition that it is said the trouble of mixing politics and street cleaning there—is that once mixed, you couldn't tell them apart—no wonder women don't turn out in full dress uniform as if to celebrate some gala day, when they see announcements of "Big Political Meeting" posted about.

Yet in a certain town, and a western town, too, mind you, once there were some women who attended a political meeting, and it was a nice, clean, clear cut meeting, too. They were sort of idealistic women, not ideal, remember, and nobody knows why they went to a political meeting. Perhaps it was because they had so often heard the remarks: "Well, who are you going to vote for?" and "Only one more day, thank the Lord!" They might give a good many reasons, based upon physiological premises—but they went to be able to explain it to "him."

Anyway, the one big day, the "blue ribbon" event of the political world, would soon arrive, as the next day was to witness in the Territory the heroic struggle for separate statehood.

A few moments after they entered the hall, they were a human island, entirely surrounded by men, but not a man in all the throng knew they were there. It gave them a numb comprehension of the infinitesimality of women; they realized that they were not of much interest or importance as a Funding Bill or a Territorial debt.

Suddenly, a man with a cockley green tie and blue shirt, was aware of a disturbing element. He forgot his allegiance to the speaker so far as to glare around to see what was interrupting the beautiful sentences about "Legal luminaries" and "The hall mark of sincerity" being stamped all over some candidate's conduct and speeches.

The disturbing element continued, in a high, childish voice: "Well, my artistic sense may not be highly developed, but I know better than to assist at my own freezing. These curtains may look warm, but let's move away from this door! What is that man talking about? The pedigree of Indian baskets?" "No, he isn't," replied the speaker.

Home they started, humming: "Say an revoir to Marcus Smith; His Statehood cry is all a myth. He's sung that song so many years, To hear it now moves us to learn."

The man with the green tie smiled contentedly, and settled back in his chair. Even an old Indian, with a name like "Drop-a-Nickel-in-the-Slot," gave a grunt of satisfaction. Oh, well, everybody knows that a stiff-backed theater chair is one of the hardest substances known to geologists, so perhaps that accounted for the restlessness of the fair sex.

MORTUARY.

marked the little woman with the doll curls. "Do be quiet! He says John Statehood advocates are anxious for a sick plum! The idea!" The childish voice continued: "Yes, we are just camping out; but such a lovely location and gorgeous sunsets!" "I've had to get up early, these strenuous political times. I usually see the sunrise," broke in a wee bit of a woman, "but no views have a ghost of a show at our house except political views, and it's taxes, copper mines—just that woman's hair like burnished copper? Do you really think gray will be the leading color?" "Is that speaker running a matrimonial bureau? He said they had four bachelors on the ticket." Here the owner of the doll curls again interrupted with a potentant, "Girls, do hush! He said that again!" "Said what again?" "Why, called Arizona a sick plum." Just then the man behind them suggested it was a "rich plum," but his remark was drowned in the indignation following. The man with the cockley green tie ruminated. Could it be that he was in Darkest Africa, that land where a citizen may become an entre without his own consent? He pinched himself. No; he was still at a political meeting. He groaned, mumbling something about styles and the color of hair not being the lum tum caper just at that particular time, but the grumbling was ignored.

The speaker continued: "Because we stand upon principles which are winning in themselves and cannot lose forever."

"But," persisted the childish voice, "that man back of you said somebody deserved the fate of a mangy Mexican prairie dog. I wonder who he meant? Merely, I wish election was over. What is the 'Hamilton Bill'?"

Just then the owner of the doll curls arose, saying: "Oh, words, words, words; wind, wind, wind; flub, flub, flub-doodle. I'm going home!"

Home they started, humming: "Say an revoir to Marcus Smith;

His Statehood cry is all a myth. He's sung that song so many years, To hear it now moves us to learn."

BIG INCREASE FOR 1906.
Not less than 370,000,000 pounds of copper wire were in use on the numerous telephone lines of the Bell companies last year. In 1906 there is expected an increase of 53,000,000 pounds. In addition to wire considerable quantities of copper are used in the manufacture of brues for telephone instruments and for alloys required in other branches of telephone service.
